

SYNOPSIS

In the fight against those that seek to harm planet Earth and the animals that live upon it, a new team was formed to defend those that couldn't defend themselves. That team was the 'Megabeasts'!

During an excursion to record the population of the lowland gorilla in the Congo, Chief Environmental Scientist to the United Nations, Professor Suzuki Inamoto, encountered a rather strange beast. Fuelled by rumours within the local populace of an 'ape-man' living in the jungle, the Professor soon discovered him to be more than just a rumour. After befriending Azizi, as he was called, the Professor realized there may be others like him; men that could morph into animals.

He convinced the Secretary-General of the United Nations to set up a secret project to locate and recruit these individuals in the fight against Eco-terrorism.

He and Azizi flew to all corners of the globe, chasing stories and legends of these creatures until they tracked the individuals down.

Once discovered they were convinced to join the newly formed team in the fight to protect all the animals of the earth. Five men and women were recruited, all from different backgrounds, all with special powers. From Brazil came Caipora, an Amazonian tribal Princess with the ability to morph into a Black Panther. She was to become 'Shadow'. From the North African Savannahs came Abrato, an ex-American Special Forces soldier working as a mercenary. He possessed the ability to morph into a White Rhino and was given the name 'Tank'. From outback Australia came Marty Moore, a young man with the ability to morph into a Giant Red Kangaroo. He was named 'Blue'.

From sunny Nevada there was Ben Bringham who had the ability to change into a Golden Eagle. His team name was 'Talon'. Along with Azizi they formed the 'Megabeasts'.

The Professor and his daughter, Reiko, used their facilities and knowledge of nanotechnology to devise armbands that would assist the team in their fight. To transform into their chosen animals the team members would draw the power from the earth, and with a cry of "Primal Form" would morph. The armbands were designed to interact with the morphing procedure. Upon drawing the energy from the earth the bands would activate, unleashing their nanotechnology and covering selected parts of the team in lightweight armour and weapons.

Among the many men that would seek to harm the planet there was one in particular that drew the attention of the team. He was a man that few had met, but his dastardly work was known to many. He went by the name of 'SinistR' and he was a Texan oil magnate that owned many large corporations that made money from harming the earth. He employed local militia to ensure his operations ran smoothly, but whenever things became tough he sent in his 'Legion of Extinction', a mechanized platoon of robots that feared no man.

The Professor secured the rights to a small, secluded Pacific island whose main feature was an extinct volcano. Inside the volcano he constructed laboratories, living quarters and a control room from where he could monitor the state of the earth's animal species. With the aid of their Jetcopter, the team can be inserted anywhere in the world to take up the fight against illegal loggers, smugglers, poachers and environmental outlaws.

The show is aimed at the early teenage market and carries strong moral codes of good defeating evil, educational environmental lessons and current affairs, as well as good old-fashioned doses of comic battles.

