How is your Community collecting, storing and verifying STATE-MANDATED credentials for proxy caregivers, private-sitters and third-party caregivers?

REGULATION

(g) Maintain supporting documentation reflecting that the employee or contractor serving as the proxy caregiver has the basic qualifications as represented, e.g. no findings of abuse, neglect or exploitation entered against the individual in the nurse aide registry, a satisfactory report of motor vehicle driving record where the proxy caregiver may be transporting clients and a satisfactory criminal records check where required by other rules applicable to the specific licensed facility. (h) Maintain written evidence of satisfactory performances on initial and annual skills competency determinations utilizing skills competency checklists which have either been made available by the department or developed and completed by appropriately licensed healthcare professionals. The competency-based skills checklists must reflect a testing of the knowledge and observation of the skills associated with the completion of all of the discrete tasks necessary to do the specific health maintenance activity in accordance with accepted standards of care.

(12) Where the home permits a resident to hire his or her own companion-sitter, proxy caregiver to perform health maintenance activities or aide of any sort, the home must require assurance that the companion-sitter, proxy caregiver or aide so hired is familiar with emergency evacuation routes and has documentation reflecting compliance with the provisions of the Rules for Proxy Caregivers, Chapter 111-8-100, as applicable,

IN THE NEWS

The screenshot shows the AARP website with a news article titled "Seniors seek caregiver background checks". The article is dated March 30, 2007, and is written by David Ryan. The article discusses a Napa County initiative to screen caregivers and mentions a local group of elder advocates launching a campaign to urge Napa County and its cities to become part of a program requiring home caregivers to be fingerprinted and subject to FBI background checks. The article also mentions that while some home health aide agencies do background checks, people with criminal backgrounds can slip past those checks if they come from outside the county or state. The article concludes by stating that according to court records, Hunter pleaded no contest in 2004 to stealing a blank check belonging to an 83-year-old Napa woman, and that Hunter was sentenced to two years in state prison.

Seniors seek caregiver background checks

County initiative would screen those who provide in-home care

MARCH 30, 2007 12:00 AM • BY DAVID RYANREGISTER STAFF WRITER

Napa County District Attorney Gary Lieberstein has heard stories from the state parole system, stories where parole officers tell convicts that home caregiving is a promising field for gainful employment.

"I don't think they would suggest they do it because they wanted to see someone ripped off," he said. "I'd imagine it's because parolees can get the work without a lot of background checking."

In response to stories like that, a local group of elder advocates is launching a first-of-its kind campaign to urge Napa County and its cities to become part of a program requiring home caregivers be fingerprinted and subject to FBI background checks. Each jurisdiction would have to pass its own version of the permit.

While some home health aide agencies do background checks at the local courthouse to try and protect their customers, people with criminal backgrounds can slip past those checks if they come from outside the county or state.

What happens too often, elder advocates say, is that people like Comeliner Hunter, a Vallejo woman who had prior convictions for grand theft before she became a home caregiver, gain access to an elder and take advantage.

According to court records, Hunter pleaded no contest in 2004 to stealing a blank check belonging to an 83-year-old Napa woman. Hunter, who was the woman's caretaker, used the check to pay her rent.

Hunter was sentenced to two years in state prison.

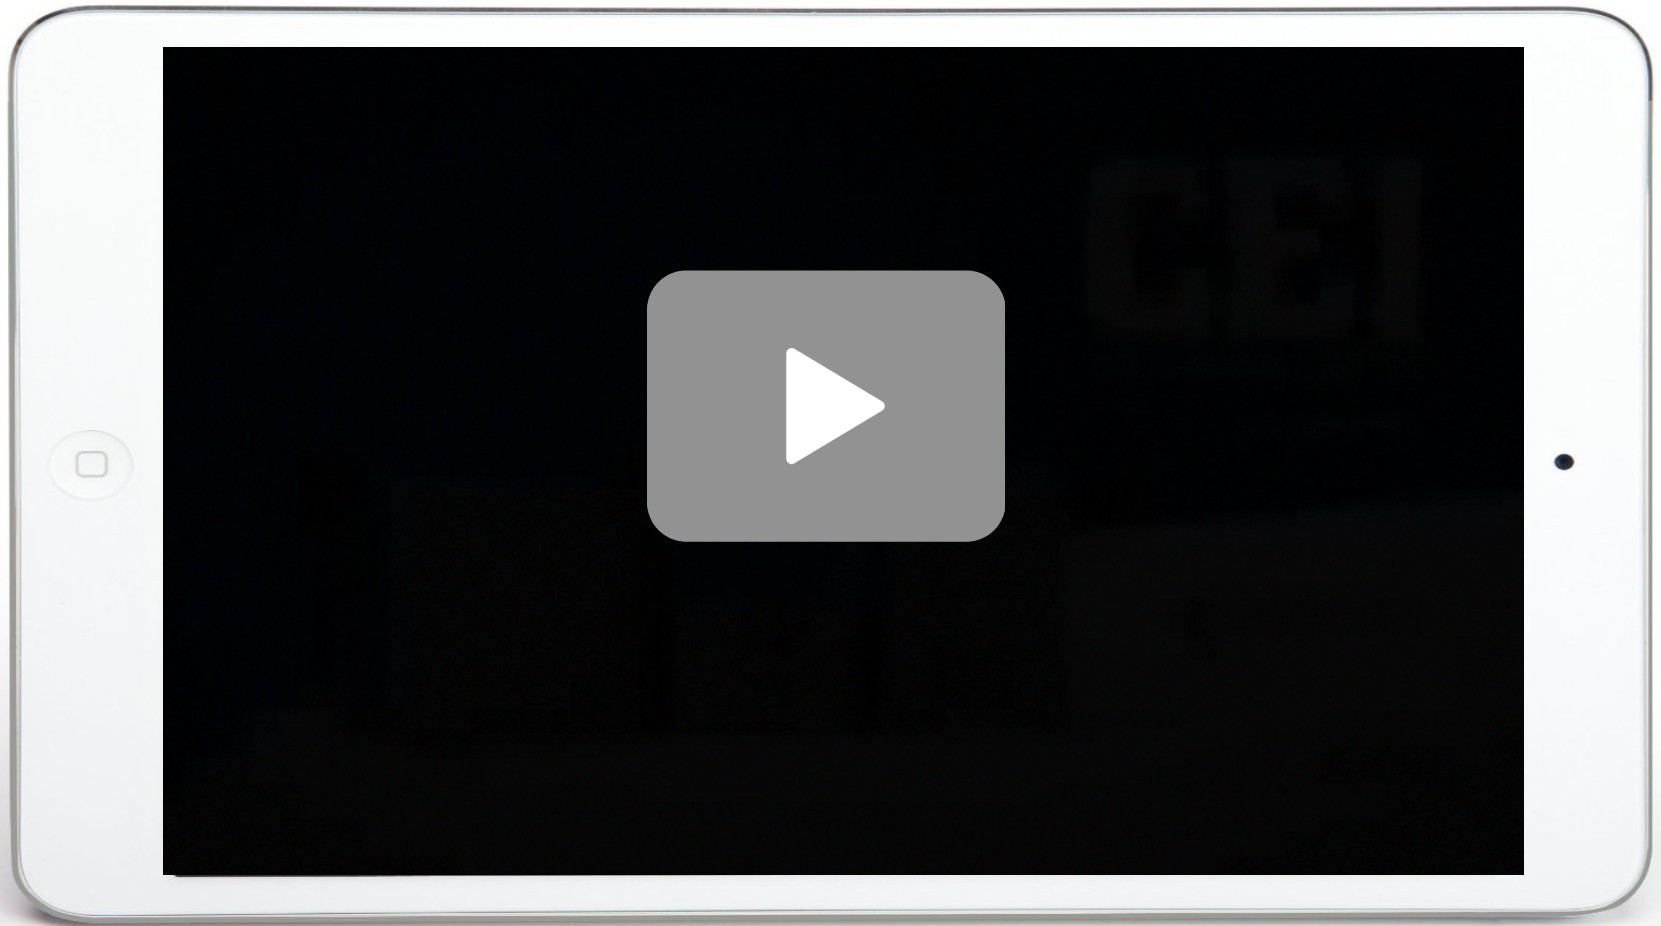

Only 55% of agencies did a federal background check.

“Some of the paid caregivers are so unqualified it’s scary and really puts the senior at risk,”
