

For a thousand years the Marches have protected the world from the Nithrain, the witch-lords, the wickedness haunting the fringes of fireside tales. The Marches are believed impregnable until a gifted young swordswoman named Lena is tricked by her master into stealing a galdrar, one of six stones that power them. When Lena touches the galdrar, it melts on her palm and is swallowed into her blood. Only the galdrar's return will prevent a war that will cloak the land in shadow.

Sweeping across a vast world where ancient enemies issue from golden deserts, banished races escape from subterranean tombs, and legions clash in steel showers, Lena's fate lies in stark choices where the surest road to victory may unleash greater suffering.

Eyes Last Seen Dying

Colin Adams