Col-lab
Promoting Collective Action
for Sustainable Development

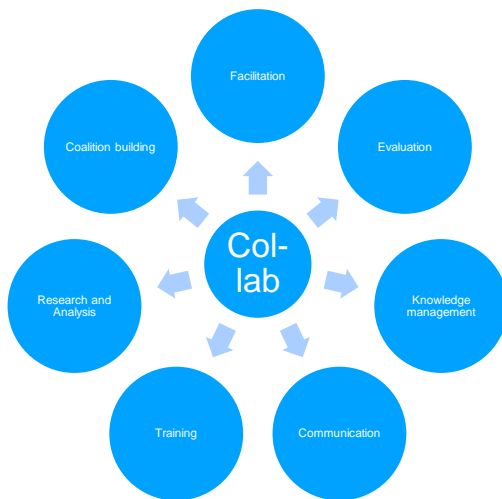

Commented [UdMO1]: I would like this to replace the current "Analysis and Advisory Services for effective collaborative action". What do you think?

First page

¿Is it possible to deliver effective solutions in the 21st Century without well-managed collaborative action?

Human progress today requires solutions involving multiple actors. While that is not new, our own experience shows that more often than not cooperation schemes fall short to deliver the intended results.

Col-lab provides the necessary tools, methods and skills for public institutions, business and civil society organizations to operate effectively in multi-actor complex environments, whether as part of the internal management process or in the context of their relations with other actors.

Second page:

Col-lab is a response to the growing need of a wide array of development organizations to revisit the development landscape, undergo structural changes, improve processes or increase the impact of their participation in collective actions to promote realistic and measurable results.

On map of the word, the following terms, distributed across the globe:

- Policy dialogue
- Donor diversification strategies
- Multi-stakeholder partnerships
- Strategic partnerships
- Framework agreements
- Goal-directed networks

And also:

Mission statement

In Col-lab we consider that, both individually and collectively, we are evolving towards more complex and mixed forms of interaction and organization. Our view is that the intellectual effort to understand that evolution needs to be combined with the practical capacity to take advantage of its great potential: the construction of realistic schemes and environments where both citizens and organizations can participate critically and contribute effectively to the public good.

Col-lab supports the work of:
