about us

We didn't become an organic tea company - we started as one way back in 1997 well before the NOP certification program was established in the U.S. back in 2007. Haizhen, a Shanghai native and our company's founder, made her first trip to a tea farm in 1997. The farm manager pointed to two large hills: "Haizhen, you should lease those two hills... and produce exactly the tea that you want."

Haizhen couldn't afford that much land, but she did know the type of tea that she wanted: organic, sustainably priced, and delicious! If she could not have the land, she would travel the land and find the farmers who could produce these teas.

Thus, Haizhen became the first all-organic tea provider in North America! In 1997, she founded Two Hills Tea. The health oriented, organic craving, farmer friendly locals embraced Haizhen's vision.

organic and pesticide-free tea matters to us

We like visiting every supplier to check out their crops and to make sure they're organic because we only select tea from certified organic co-op tea farms. So we put on our sunhats and spend some quality time on every tea farm because hardwork isn't hardwork without getting your hands a little dirty. We also know that the simple things in life are important and we think that hanging out and having tea with our friends from all over the world is cool.

Then, we bring back all of the tea and regularly test batches to make sure they're free of pesticides.

It matters to us that all of our products are certified organic and free of harmful pesticides and GMOs, because we wouldn't want you to drink anything we wouldn't.

We believe that everyone should have access to organic, pesticide-free, and affordably priced tea!

the organic tea market is growing

In fact, over the next five years it is expected to grow by five percent in the U.S.

Health benefits associated with organic beverages due to less use of fertilizers will push the sales of organic beverages during this period. The growth in organic agriculture to avoid chemicals containing harmful toxic residues is also proving to be beneficial for the environment.

There is an increased want for improving lifestyle and growing awareness around the health benefits of organic food products.

Consumers are also becoming more calorie-conscious due to a growing amount of obesity.

The Global Organic Beverages Market notes that organic tea is one of the segments that dominates the global beverages market and will continue to do so over the coming years.

one of the causes for growth in sales is matcha

Matcha allows for the the entire tea leaf to be consumed, therefore tea drinkers are provided with 100% of the benefits that matcha provides. Matcha contains fiber, vitamin A, vitamin C, chlorophyll, and polyphenols, and an array of antioxidants.

In 2015, matcha began gaining popularity and it continues to do so as it becomes more widely drank and used in a variety of food products.

Matcha's popularity is meant to increase going into 2018, as it becomes more widely used in a variety of products and recieves more media coverage regarding its health benefits.

know your teas

Most teas come from the same plant, the camellia sinensis. The difference however, between tea varieties, is the way that the plant is oxidized or fermented. This is more easily explained by using the example of an apple. When sliced, an apple is white. But after a few minutes, the apple is brown. This is caused by the reaction the apple has with the air.

green

Green tea is not oxidized. This is how the tea leaves keep their green colour. Chinese green tea is usually pan-fired and the Japanese usually apply hot steam. These techniques give very different tastes.

black

Black tea is 100% oxidized. This is because the leaf is allowed to oxidize, being in contact with air. This is similar to allowing a sliced apple to turn brown.

oolong

Oolong is partially oxidized tea. This makes this category a little more complicated. Lightly oxidized oolongs will share many characteristics with green teas, and highly oxidized oolongs will be similar to black teas.

white

White tea is very lightly oxidized tea, using 100% buds or leaves & buds. Unlike the teas above, white tea is air-dried, meaning there is no firing or steaming.

fermented (dark)

Fermented or dark tea can have varying levels of oxidation. However, what makes it different is the fermentation process. Going back to the apple example, if yeast or bacteria come into contact with the apple, it transforms into a different thing. This is because it changes the chemical nature of the apple. The fermentation process changes the chemical nature of tea.

herbal/tisane

Herbal teas and tisanes are any plant other than camellia sinensis that are used to make an infusion. This could include rooibos, chamomile, or peppermint as just a few examples. Herbal teas and tisanes are naturally caffeine free.

What is matcha?

Matcha is green tea powder. It's made up of premium shade-grown green tea leaves that have been finely stone-ground into a bright green, talc-like powder.

What are the benefits of matcha?

The benefits of matcha are numerous! This is because it allows for the entire tea leaf to be consumed, therefore tea drinkers are provided with 100% of the benefits that matcha provides. Matcha contains fiber, vitamin A, vitamin C, chlorophyll, and polyphenols (naturally occurring micronutrients found in plants).

One serving of matcha powder contains 1,384 ORAC units of antioxidants which is more than almost any other food on the planet!

Matcha is also rich in a unique type of antioxidants known as catechins, which have powerful cancer-fighting properties. Catechins can also help to increase your metabolism, promote physical endurance, and weight loss Matcha also contains caffeine and L-Theanine. When caffeine and L-Theanine get together, they produce a sustainable source of energy that lasts 4-6 hours, along with a calm-yet-alert state of mind. Matcha promotes focus and concentration, without the jitters or crash of coffee.

One of the causes for growth in organic tea sales is the growing demand for matcha.

In 2015 matcha began gaining popularity and it continues to do so as it becomes more widely drank and used in a variety of food products.

Matcha's popularity is meant to increase going into 2018, as it becomes more widely used in a variety of products and receives more media coverage regarding its health benefits.

In the growing tea industry, pesticide use continues to increase.

Tea from popular brands more commonly contain various toxic pesticides and heavy metal contaminants. In fact, over the last five years, the FDA has frequently flagged tea as an import that “warrants special attention.”

Certain chemicals and contaminants that have been banned in North America may still be available for use in some of the world’s largest exporters of tea, such as China, India, Kenya, and Sri Lanka. Furthermore, foreign tea producers may lack understanding and access to FDA requirements regarding its domestic and foreign food program. This raises serious concern regarding food safety regulation in the tea industry, and more importantly, concern for the health of tea drinkers everywhere.

We visit each of our suppliers to build relationships and to ensure that organic farming is practiced. And we regularly test batches of tea that we receive to make sure that they are free of pesticides. All of our products are certified organic and free of harmful pesticides.

At Two Hills, we believe that everyone should have access to affordably priced, organic, and pesticide-free tea.
