About CareerPathIntelligence.com™

In order for students to have choice, they must understand the career choices available to them. There is a sea of data out there available for students. And only a puddle of insight into that data.

We believe that whether you are a high school, college, or university student trying to determine your career path, or 40+ or 50+ and on your second act, everyone's career is important. Careers have intrinsic importance to every individual. And skills training in an ever-changing, dynamic labor market. Skills training remains critical to the maintenance of a healthy local, and even global economy. Yesterday's jobs are not today's. Today's jobs won't be tomorrow's. Technology, age demographics, and the dire need for further social innovation and "interruption" to make the world a better place-- will make the labor market anything but static. Skills will matter at least as much as the credentials that students receive upon successful completion of their programs-- and increasingly so.

The COVID19 pandemic has showed us just how important emergency room nurses are. We salute them. And research scientists. And all front-line workers. But what about the dire need for pilots, truck drivers and trades people?
