THE CLAIM COMPANY

OUR CLAIM TO FAME

Enjoy a Taste of History.

The story of The Claim Company™:

Created by Jim Errant at Clark and Belden on Chicago's North side, the restaurant became an instant hit, known throughout the area for two new concepts: the build-your-own gourmet burger and the Salad Saloon. The southwestern décor was a perfect match for a restaurant where the burger came to be called the "Motherlode™".

In 1979, The Claim Company™ put down stakes in the suburbs, opening Northbrook Court. While the Northbrook location was much larger than the Chicago space, the site was still not large enough for crowds. North Shore diners loved the Motherlode™, the Salad Saloon, and the casual, comfortable atmosphere of the restaurant. The Claim Company™ became a popular gathering spot for family and friends. Over and over again, local couples have shared tales of how they had their first date at the restaurant years back.

In 1981, The Claim Company™ headed West — at least to Oak Brook. The restaurant quickly became a West suburban hot spot.

The Claim Company™ continued to thrive during the '80s and into the '90s after attracting national attention, in 1994 Jim Errant sold The Claim Company™ to an East Coast company with plans to expand. That dream never came to fruition, and The Claim Company™ closed in 1997. Loyal customers mourned its loss and, as former long-time members of The Claim family, so did we. Having worked with Jim Errant for many years, we shared his passion for great food at reasonable prices, and never forgot what The Claim Company™ meant to the North Shore. That's why, in the fall of 2009, we brought The Claim Company™ back to Northbrook Court. In designing the new look, we drew inspiration from the restaurant's three previous locations. In a way, stepping through our door should be a bit like coming home.

If you enjoyed The Claim Company™ in years past, we warmly welcome you back—and invite you to visit our historic wall of photos from the restaurant's early days.

And if you're new to The Claim Company™, we know you'll soon come to understand what has always made this place so special.
